About CHSU:

California Health Sciences University (CHSU) was founded in 2012 with a mission of improving health outcomes within the Central Valley. Central California has an abundant need for compassionate, highly-trained and strongly motivated health professionals who can provide quality care to an underserved and indigent population. CHSU hopes to serve this unmet need by developing collaborative health professionals who will be leaders and innovators of health care delivery at the local, state and national level. This effort has been spearheaded at CHSU by implementing a team-based learning (TBL) andragogy that cultivates an environment of critical and creative thinking amongst our growing professional students. This philosophy will be implemented across all future health professional schools at CHSU to create a learning environment focused on interprofessional, patient-centered health care delivery.

With a growth-culture philosophy at its roots, CHSU is committed to innovation, mentorship and continuous self-development. The team-based empowerment philosophy is at the center of the CHSU ethos and provides a platform for all employees to perform at their full potential.

CHSU is proud to be at the heart of the Central Valley where individuals and families can enjoy a culturally diverse region that is internationally recognized as one of richest agricultural regions in the world. Situated at the foothills of the Sierra Nevada mountain range, Fresno County offers residents affordable quality of life, with close proximity to international attractions such as Yosemite National Park and Sequoia National Park, and the Pacific coastline and beaches. The City of Clovis is also proud to be nationally recognized for their school districts that provide quality primary education to our growing community.
